FISHING: Native and stocked trout are found in Honey Creek. Mountain streams like Reeds Gap Run hide small populations of native trout. Hiking trails offer access to Honey Creek. The spring months offer the best angling. Pennsylvania Fish and Boat Commission regulations and laws apply.

CAMPING: tents only, pets permitted on all sites
The 14-site campground is for tents only and opens the second Friday in April and closes the third Sunday in October. Water is by Site 6. The shower house is by Parking Lot B across State Park Road.

PICNICKING: Mostly wooded picnic areas are available year-round. There is ample parking, tables, and one small, non-reservable shelter. Modern flush toilets and running water are available during the warmer months.

Three picnic pavilions may be reserved up to 11 months in advance for a fee. Unreserved picnic pavilions are free on a first-come, first-served basis.

HIKING: 3 miles of trails

The trails loop throughout the park in forests and along Honey Creek.

Reeds Gap Spur Trail of the Mid State Trail starts near the intersection of State Park Road and New Lancaster Valley Road. The trail climbs along scenic Reeds Gap Run to Knob Ridge Road, which leads to Poe Paddy State Park 18 miles away. This very beautiful and rugged trail has interesting large rocks along the upper section. Once many logs were brought down the trail to a sawmill that stood by the park office.

The annual Reeds Gap Fall Festival is held the second Saturday in October and features many children's activities.

History

Reeds Gap is a natural water gap in Hightop, also called Thick Mountain. American Indians from the village of Ohesson, today's Lewistown, used this valley as hunting grounds. When European settlers arrived, they homesteaded and named the area the New Lancaster Valley.

During the late 1700s, Reeds Gap became a popular bush meeting ground. People packed lunches and traveled in horse-drawn wagons to the area to hear a circuit preacher and enjoy neighborhood fellowship. These bush meetings, also known as homecomings, were held through the 1920s.

In the mid-1800s, the park's namesakes, Edward and Nancy Reed, set up a water-powered sawmill along Honey Creek just inside of the western boundary of the present park.

Part of the historic water-storage dam is still visible near Honey Creek in the southeastern corner of the park. Edward Reed's son, George Wilbur Reed, was a sawyer at the mill. Another son, John, later moved the watermill to Virginia by horses.

Around 1900, a steam-powered sawmill operated by the park's maintenance building. After decades of logging, the forests were gone. On January 15, 1905, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania purchased the depleted land from William Witmer and Sons Lumber Company. Eventually parts of this land became Reeds Gap and Poe Valley state parks.

Around 1930, people sold five-cent bottles of soda pop cooled in Reeds Gap Run to attract picnickers and to improve the local economy during the Great Depression.

In 1933, a national work program called the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) built a residential camp five miles east of Reeds Gap in the upper end of New Lancaster Valley. The former Pennsylvania Department of Forests and Waters ran Camp S-113 and the U.S. Army directed the 200 young men. A goal of the camp was to change the "jungle" around Reeds Gap into an attractive recreational facility. By the late 1930s, the park offered stone fireplaces, tables, picnic pavilions, play equipment, pit toilets, and running water.

Reeds Gap State Park officially opened in 1938. On summer Sunday afternoons, local bands entertained from a bandstand and swimmers enjoyed a small lake formed by a CCC-built dam in Honey Creek.

World War II ended the CCC. Most of the wooden CCC structures were removed as they deteriorated, but part of the old CCC camp is now a Bureau of Forestry field office.

Electrical power came to the valley in mid-1940s.

In 1965, a major developmental phase replaced the old dam with swimming pools. A new water system, flush toilets, a modern bathhouse, snack bar, maintenance building, and parking lots were constructed. In 2009, the aging swimming pools were removed.

Natural History

The dominant habitat in and around the park is of towering white pines, hemlocks, and oaks. Maple, ash, tulip poplar, black gum, hickory, dogwood, mountain laurel, and rhododendron add to the year-round scenic beauty.
